

School Lunch Needs Variety

Since lunch time is the one meal during the day when most children are beyond the reach of mother's immediate supervision, it is the meal that requires her most careful attention in order to make sure the youngsters have a properly balanced diet.

The problem will vary in relation to the facilities available in the many different schools. It also will vary in relation to the foods that the school is equipped to serve.

Only one-fourth of the nation's schools are under the National School Lunch program. Most of the others have cafeterias of their own. Yet it is in the lunch box the child carries from home to school that mother can exert her greatest effective influence.

Her first step in assuring that her child is properly fed at noon time, is to become acquainted with the facilities of the school her youngster is attending. Her second is to make sure that home training has developed good eating habits in her child so that he will make proper selections when choice is offered at school.

Her third step concerns the lunch box that is carried from home to school, and especially what is in it.

Knowing what the school can provide, which, at a minimum, is the essential milk a child should have, mother can prepare the contents of the lunch box in appetizing form to make certain the youngsters have the food they need.

Whatever goes into the school child's lunch box should be prepared with a view to stimulating the youngster's appetite. Mothers should remember that meal time may also be play time in the estimation of their children, and that sometimes children would rather play than eat.

Oriental Rugs Bring Treatment To Child Stricken with Disease

A child was seriously ill with a little-known disease. Exhaustive efforts of doctors to combat the illness had been futile. In a final consultation they agreed that the youngster should be taken to a distant city to undergo lengthy treatment by a specialist in a hospital where extensive research in the strange illness was being done.

The cost of such a trip was staggering to the parents of the child. They had already spent all of their savings on treatments.

When the doctor in the distant city was told of the family's plight, he quickly assured the parents he would give his services without charge. Furthermore, he arranged for the child to be hospitalized without cost. This left the question of transportation for the child and mother, plus the living expenses of the mother in the distant city. The doctor had said that psychologically it was important to the child's condition for them floor. Suddenly, he noticed the badly worn rug. He remembered the three Oriental rugs stored in the attic, which had been willed to him by an employer 15 years ago and which the family had saved for the day when they would be able to afford a better home.

The following morning, he ordered a classified advertisement to be published, offering the three rugs for sale. In four days he had sold two of them for a total of $2500.

The next day his wife and their child were on their way to the faraway specialist. Twenty-four hours later the child was hospitalized and treatments began.

Today the child is back home, not fully cured, but under treatment that can be supervised by the family doctor. Before the treatments by the specialist, the chance of life was practically nil. Today the chances of recovery are 50-50, thanks to a generous specialist, a generous hospital, a persistent father... and a little classified ad.
